Memo to: ECR Customers & Representatives

From: Karin Englert

Subject: Proposition 65

Proposition 65 is a California law that is intended to provide California residents with information about exposure to toxic chemicals. Proposition 65 requires the State of California to publish a list of chemicals known to cause cancer, or reproductive toxicity. Unless exempt, a person selling products in California is required to give a clear and reasonable warning before exposing any individual to chemicals on the State of California list. The warning may be provided by general methods such as placing labels on consumer products.

This warning label, shown below, will be applied to all finished goods manufactured by ECR International to comply with the California requirements. ECR International is labeling all finished goods regardless of which State they are shipped to as we cannot control distribution within the commerce channel once products leave our facility.
